The article headed "A Common Economic Error, contributed to and published in this issue of The Weekly by Hon, S. A. Knapp, of the United States Bureau of Animal Industry, abounds with such insight nto the errors of the Southern farmer and suggestions for their correction, that we cannot refrain from advising all to read and heed.

The good price at which cotton sold, especially during the fall of 1907, came near enguifing the cotton section in wholesale ruin. Every piece of a farmer, piece of a plow, piece of a horse and piece of of land was pressed into service dur ing 1908 to grow cotton, with the vain hope that it would sell for more even than it did in 1907. The price of tools, food stuffs, labor, landrent, etc., of course went up along with the price of cotton. These were bought in more liberal quantities than ever with the proceeds of the preceding cotton crop and invested You are authorized to use my photo in the growing crop of 1908.
